PREFACE

The author is very happy to be able to put out this first book which is going to be a humble addition to the glaringly inadequate number of publications, credited to the Indian writers, on biochemic literature. As its title indicates, the work is especially devoted to the description and discussion of all the common diseases and their cure by employing biochemic medicines. The book is designed to serve as a suitable text book for students in academic institutions as well as a guide to the general readers interested in biochemic studies. At the same time, the book is also intended to meet the professional requirements of the medical practitioners.

It is a matter of common knowledge now that the biochemic system of medicine knows just twelve medicines and nothing more. However, the poor numerical strength of these drugs should provide no reason whatsoever for any prejudices against this system that has long proved its merit and utility. Readers should do well to get themselves acquainted with the simple theory of how the deficiency of salts in human body results by various physical disorders and how the cure is sought to be secured by filling up the deficiency with the twelve salts. The crude power of these salts is developed dynamically by the method of gradual drug potentiation and astonishing cures are achieved for diseases of manifold nature with the help of different potencies in vogue.

The book contains more than hundred leading disease with their treatment and useful suggestions. The Materia Medica of the twelve tissue remedies and the salient points about the biochemic therapy are also furnished for the sake of student-readers.

It is hoped that the merits of the book, if any, will be duly appreciated and drawbacks made known to the author. Kind suggestions and comments are invited from all the quarters so as to improve the quality of the next edition.

Thanks are due to Mr. V.P. Nerkar for his tireless and single-handed work in preparing the press copy through all its stages and to Shri. M.B. Joshi for the prompt printing of the book.
