INTRODUCTION

My association with Sri T.K. Karunakaran (Karunan to his close friends) dates back to late Nineteen Thirties when we were both studying in Loyala College, Madras for B.A. degree course and being good at hockey, he represented the College Hockey Team. After graduation I joined the Army and he prosecuted his studies and joined the Madras Police Force.

Later after retirement we both came to Bangalore and settled here and revived our friendship although I was not aware that he had taken great interest in the study of Homeopathy medicines and was rendering free treatment.

I had on many occasions read in newspapers and periodicals about the efficacy of Homeopathy medicine and that patients suffering from dreaded disease like cancer and tuberculosis had been cured with this medicine. I had also read about the German doctors like Muller, Reckwood who are renowned practitioners and exponents of Homeopathy. I had also come to know about this system when I was in St. Aloysius College in Mangalore where they have a large Homeopathy hospital in Kankanady.

It was by mere chance that I discovered that Karunan was a Homeopathy doctor. A few years back I suffered from a chronic illness and the doctors recommended surgery as the only option. But I was not keen. I, therefore, went to a Homeopathy doctor and was under his treatment for over a year. He tried various different medicines and I was certain he was using the trial and error method and there was no tangible results and to say the least any confidence I had in Homeopathy medicines become dubious. I once casually mentioned about my condition to Karunan and he took me under his fold. He gave me a medicine and lo and behold within a week he hit the target with a bulls eye (to use a military term) and I started finding relief and after two months I fully recovered with no sign of recurrence.

I was then convinced that Karunan had made a thorough professional study of this medicine and I found he had heaps of books in his possession to which he was constantly referring.

Moreover he had a host of patients, past and present, who found cure at his hands.

A few months back he told me that he intended to write a book, which would be an easy guidance and reference to practitioners and a model for future authors.

When the book was ready he gave me the transcript, which I have browsed through and what impressed me the most was the unique and novel method he has adopted in the layout for a Homeopathy text book. I had read some other books and had found that it was difficult to locate the correct medicine to treat an illness when symptoms are similar as the names of the medicines are mentioned and symptoms are listed under each medicine and the same symptoms of illness can appear in slight variation under different medicines. What Karunan has achieved is a much simpler form to treat them and thus to give a fool proof short cut. He has categorized various illness in segments of its own and suggested suitable medicines with mathematical precision with very little scope to make mistakes. He has compiled book so intelligently with painstaking and undaunted enthusiasm and accuracy with commendable conception of the subject for which he must have spent hours of hard work and to do all this at this age is incredible and no words are adequate to express the praise he deserves.

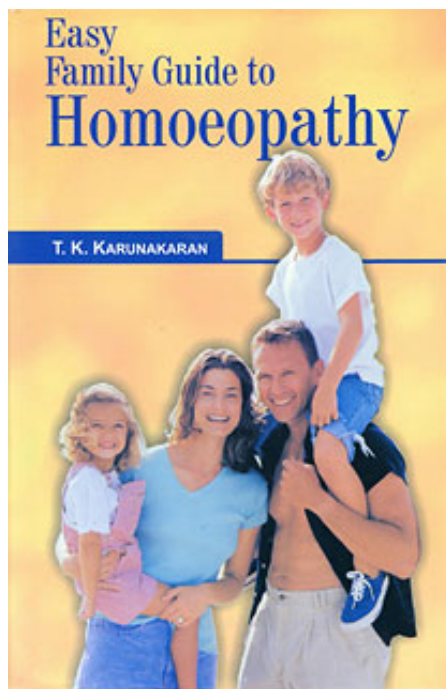

This book deserves to be dedicated to posterity by the author so that his, so far hidden, talent becomes useful to
