THE MOST COMMON REMEDIES IN PEDIATRIC PRACTICE

JS: I went through my records and over the past three or four years, something like that, I have been keeping my cured cases on a kind of computer database. Going through these records, I pulled out the most common pediatric remedies in my practice. The percentages are the percentages of total pediatric prescriptions. And in my practice, 20 per cent of the patients are pediatric, and I suppose it must be the same for anyone who is in general practice. The most common remedy that I give is Calcarea phosphorica: 6 per cent of all pediatric prescriptions. Now this is interesting for me, because the most common remedy in the adults, in all the prescriptions put together, is Sulphur, and the percentage of Sulphur prescriptions is 6 per cent. So I saw that there is a kind of internal coherency about this figure: it is probably valid. It is an interesting thing. Of all the prescriptions, the most common remedy is given only 6 per cent of the time; not very much. The next most common prescription is Carcinosinum. Of all prescriptions, Calcarea phosphorica is 2.2 per cent, much more common in my practice in children. Carcinosinum is 3.5 per cent of all prescriptions. Then the next group, group three, is Sulphur, Natrum muriaticum, the Mercuries: all the Mercuries, in other words: Mercurius iodatus ruber, Mercurius iodatus flavus. And Pulsatilla. Each one is 4.5 per cent. The next group: Nux vomica, Sanicula, Silicea, Tuberculinum. Each one 3.5 per cent. And then the next group: Medorrhinum, Calcarea, you see is very low down there, Causticum and Rhus tox. Each one 2.5 per cent. And all these comprise 56 per cent of the pediatric prescriptions. So 44 per cent of prescriptions are the rest of the materia medica: pretty much.

FREQUENCY OF REMEDIES IN PEDIATRIC PRACTICE

(percentage of total pediatric prescriptions)

1	Calcarea phosphorica	6.0%
2	Carcinosinum	5.5%
