Chapter I

The Heart and Blood Circulation

The world's most miraculous engine, the human heart is a muscular pump. This muscle happens to be the toughest muscle in the body. The moment one is born till the time of death, the heart continues to work without even a moment's rest. This inimitable human pump is able to run a hundred years and even more without the loss of even a few minutes for repairs.

The heart is composed of 3 major types of muscles - the arterial muscle, ventricular muscle and specialized excitatory and conductive muscle fibres. These specialized muscle fibres because of their rhythmical properties and their rapidity of conduction, provide an excitatory system for the heart and a transmission system for rapid conduction of impulses throughout the heart.

Many heart ailments, especially the cardiac arrhythmias, are based on abnormalities of this special excitatory and conductive system.

The heart receives impure blood, depleted in oxygen, from the rest of the body and thereafter pumps this blood to the lungs for purification. The oxygen rich blood then returns to the left side of the heart from where it is pumped to all parts of the body. Thus, the heart is constantly at work, expending a lot of energy.

"Happiness often eludes us, just beyond our grasp, like a carrot on a stick dangling in front of a donkey; and like the fabled musk deer that wanders in the forest searching for the source of the beautiful odour, and not realizing that the scent comes from itself, we often seem to be looking at the wrong place for our happiness and self-worth." (Dr. Dean Ornish).

"Look into the depths of your own soul then you will understand, why this illness was bound to come upon you." (Freud).

The opinion of an eminent physician of the orthodox school in regard to the recent trend in Modern Medicine is worth recalling at this juncture.

'MEDICINES DO NOT CURE' declares Dr. B.M. Hegde, who is among the few doctors, who have the full panoply of U. K. medical degrees; FACC, FRCP, FRCPP, FRCPE, FICC, FICP,
