RINGWORM:

HERPES S. TINEA TONSURANS.

THAT Ringworm (Herpes s. tinea tonsurans) is due to a specific fungus is one of the certainties of practical medicine ; that the recognised treatment of the same is by external applications with the view of killing the fungi, no one needs to be told. Hitherto its medicability by internal remedies has been admitted by a certain section of the homoeopathic school of medicine. Indeed the more staunch Hahnemannians have always fought for this view, and time and again have proved its practicability; on this point I have long been at one with these more staunch of the Hahnemannians, and that simply because I have been able to verify their views clinically. For years, in common with many others, I have been constantly in the habit of treating and curing ringworm by internal remedies with relative success. . For all that I have thus far never had anything approaching to a clear notion of its true nature, and some of the cases would persist in not getting well ; and this lack of a definite idea of its nature, and also the uncertainty of its cure, is I believe fully shared by those who
