9.1.25 Swine Flu

1. The Organism

Swine flu has generally been considered to be the H1N1 influenza strain which can infect both pigs and humans. However other type A subtypes can be involved, including H1N2, H2N3, H3N1 and H3N2. The H1N1 form of swine flu is one of the descendants of the strain that caused the 1918 flu pandemic.

In late April 2009, Margaret Chan, the World Health Organization's director-general, declared a "public health emergency of international concern" under the rules of the WHO's new International Health Regulations when the first two cases of the H1N1 virus were reported in the United States, followed by hundreds of cases in Mexico. The pandemic did not eventuate. A review of the global response to the 2009 H1N1 pandemic was launched on 12th April, 2010.

2. Clinical Symptoms

Symptoms are very similar to those of influenza and of influenza-like illness in general, namely fever, chills, sore throat, muscle pains and severe headaches, coughing, weakness and general malaise.

3. Orthodox and Homoeopathic Treatment

Orthodox and homoeopathic treatment are the same for swine flu as for general seasonal influenza. Each year people die from the flu. Swine flu appears to be no more severe than typical seasonal flu and some have suggested that it is in fact less severe (Belongia EA et.al., 2010).

4. Summary

Readers will know of the of the 2009 pandemic declared by the WHO. The associated fear campaign created billions in sales for the vaccine manufacturers. The WHO response is now being investigated internationally and there is little doubt that examples of inappropriate behaviour and financial dealings will be revealed in high places before the incident is laid to rest.
